Milo loved little discoveries: a shiny pebble, a bird's feather, a path he had never tried.

Today, Grandma had promised to show him her old garden, hidden beyond a tall hedge.

"I wonder what we'll find," Milo said. His ears stood straight up.

Before they left, Milo packed a small trowel, sunflower seeds, and a snack in his green bag.

Grandma tucked the garden key into her basket.

“Will there be flowers everywhere?” Milo asked.

“Let’s go and see,” she said. “Bring your curious eyes.”

They followed the path past buzzing bees and nodding daisies.

“I haven’t visited for a long time,” Grandma said. “The garden may need some care.”

Milo pictured roses as tall as trees.

“Then we’ll help it,” he said, and hurried to keep up.
