Milo loved breezy days. They made the leaves whisper and his red scarf flutter.

Today, he and Grandma were going to Sunny Hill. They had made a kite together, with bright patches of color and a tail full of little bows.

Before they left, Milo packed his green bag. In went string, a snack, and a small kit of patches.

“Ready?” asked Grandma.

“Ready for the sky!” Milo said. He picked up their kite and followed her through the door.

Up the hill they went, step by step. The kite bumped softly against Milo's shoulder.

At the top, the grass bowed in the breeze.

"This looks like a good place," said Grandma. "Let's keep plenty of space around us."
